(a) conduct a survey of the work required to be done to comply with subregulation 1 of regulation 140 and shall report thereon to the Board together with its plans and schedule for completing the work; and

(b) report to the Board the work completed in each month not later than the tenth day of the following month.

8. Every company shall, at the beginning of its fiscal year, make a report to the Board showing the proposed amount and general description of the pipe lines it proposes to install during the fiscal year, subdivided into divisions or districts.

9. Every company shall file with the Board plans to scale of all its pipe lines used primarily for transmitting gas constructed since the 1st day of January, 1957, showing the location thereon of all valves and other works pertaining thereto.

PART II

MATERIALS AND EQUIPMENT

GENERAL

13. All material that becomes a part of a piping system shall be suitable and safe for the conditions under which it is used.

14.—(1) Materials with specifications other than those required by these regulations may be used only where the material is at least equivalent in all respects to the specifications required.

(2) Material with specifications that are not at least equivalent in all respects to the specifications required by these regulations shall not be used unless,

(a) where the material or equipment is depended upon for safety, its use is approved by the Board; or

(b) where the material or equipment is not depended upon for safety, it is tested and found suitable, and it is not used at unit stresses of greater than 50 per cent of those prescribed for comparable material and its use is not prohibited by these regulations.

(3) Where no specifications for material are required by these regulations, the material shall not be used unless it is recommended by its manufacturer for the purpose for which it is used and tested before use and found to be suitable, safe and in accordance with good engineering practice.

15.—(1) Used pipe, new pipe of unknown specifications and ASTM A-120 pipe may be used for service at a hoop stress of less than 6,000 psi if it is not closely coiled or bent, if careful visual examination indicates that it is in good condition and free from split seams or other defects that would cause leakage, and if, where the pipe is to be welded and is of unknown specification or ASTM A-120, it satisfactorily passes the weldability tests prescribed in Appendix A.

(2) Used or new pipe of unknown specifications and ASTM A-120 pipe may be used for service at a hoop stress of more than 6,000 psi and for service involving close coiling or bending if the following is complied with:

1. All pipe shall be cleaned inside and outside to permit good inspection, and shall be visually inspected to ensure that it is reasonably round and straight, and to discover any defects that might impair its strength or tightness.

2. For pipe two inches and under in nominal diameter, a sufficient length of pipe shall be bent cold through 90 degrees around a cylindrical mandrel, the diameter of which is twelve times the nominal diameter of the pipe, without developing cracks at any portion and without opening the weld. For pipe larger than two inches in diameter, flattening tests as set out in Appendix B shall be made. The number of tests under this paragraph shall be the same as required in Appendix C to determine yield strength.

3. Unless the wall thickness is known with certainty, it shall be determined by measuring the thickness at quarter points on one end of each piece of pipe. If the lot of pipe is known to be of uniform grade, size and wall thickness, measurement shall be made on not less than 10 per cent of the individual lengths, but not less than ten lengths, but if an electronic or sonic measuring device is used measurements shall be taken at random positions along the pipe length on not less than 15 per cent of the individual lengths, and on not less than ten lengths. The nominal wall thickness shall be taken as the next commercial wall thickness below the average of all the measurements taken, but in no case greater than 1.14 times the least measured thickness for all pipe having an outside diameter of less than twenty inches, and no greater than 1.11 times the least measured thickness for all pipe having an outside diameter of twenty inches or larger.

4. If the type of longitudinal joint can be determined with certainty, the corresponding longitudinal joint factor E in the table to subregulation 3 of regulation 50 shall apply, but if the type of longitudinal joint can not be determined, the factor E shall be taken as 0.60 for pipe four inches and smaller or 0.80 for pipe over four inches.

5. Weldability shall be determined by making a girth weld in the pipe under the most severe conditions under which welding will be performed in the field and using the same procedure as to be used in the field. The weld shall then be tested in accordance with Appendix A and shall be considered weldable if the requirements set forth in Appendix A are met. At least one such test weld shall be made for each 100 lengths of pipe in sizes over four inches in diameter. On sizes four inches and under, one test shall be made for each 400 lengths of pipe. If, in testing the weld, the requirements set forth in Appendix A are not met, the weldability may be established by making such chemical tests as may be necessary to ensure that the pipe material can be welded to achieve at least the yield strength required for the pipe material.

6. When the manufacturer's yield strength, tensile strength or elongation for the pipe is unknown, and no physical tests are made, the specified minimum yield strength for purpose of design shall be taken as not more than 24,000 psi. Alternately, the tensile properties may be established in accordance with Appendix C. If the yield-tensile ratio exceeds .85, the pipe shall not be used in service at a hoop stress in excess of 6,000 psi.
7. For pipe of unknown specification, the factor S in the formula in regulation 49 shall be 24,000 psi or,

- (a) 80 per cent of the average value of all yield strength tests for a uniform lot; and
- (b) the minimum value of any yield strength test;

but in no case shall S be greater than 52,000 psi.

8. New or used pipe of unknown specification and all used pipe the strength of which is impaired by corrosion or other deterioration shall be re-tested hydrostatically, either length by length in a mill type test or in the field after installation before being placed in service, and the test pressure used shall establish the maximum allowable operating pressure subject to limitations described in regulation 51.

- (3) Used pipe of known specification, other than ASTM A-120 pipe, may be used at hoop stress levels above 6,000 psi or for service involving close coiling or bending subject to paragraphs 1, 3, 4 and 8 of subregulation 2.

16. Where material is identified by die stamping, the stamping shall be done with dies having blunt or rounded edges to minimize stress concentrations.

17. Cold expanded pipe shall be API 5LX pipe or its equivalent.

18. Where piping systems are installed to withstand metal temperatures below 0° F., such additional precautions shall be taken in material and design as may be necessary to ensure public safety.

PART III

WELDING

19. No person shall make a weld in any pipe or component of a piping system unless he is qualified to make the weld under The Boilers and Pressure Vessels Act, 1951 and the procedure followed in the making of the weld shall be a procedure approved for the purpose by the Chief Inspector under that Act in the same manner as for a pressure vessel.

- 20.—(1) Welding surfaces shall be clean and free of material that may be detrimental to the weld.

- (2) End preparation for welding material of equal thickness shall conform to that shown in Figure 1 and end preparation for welding material of unequal thickness shall conform to that shown in Figure 2 and set out in the notes thereto as follows:

COMBINATIONS OF PIPE END PREPARATIONS

WELDING END TREATMENT

NOTES

1. Where materials of unequal strength are joined together, design conditions require that the thickness of the end having the lower physical property be such that its strength be at least equal to that of the adjoining part.
  2. The transition between ends of unequal thickness may be accomplished by taper or welding as illustrated or by means of a prefabricated transition ring.
  3. The transition weld shall have a slope not greater than 1.3 (Approx. 18°). Excess metal thickness of the heavier section may be tapered for a smooth transition by an angle not exceeding 30° with reference to the pipe surface.
  4. Physical properties of the deposited weld metal shall be at least equal to those of the higher strength pipe material.
  5. The design principles governing the preparation of ends having unequal thickness shall comply with the following:
    - (a) Where the nominal wall thickness of the adjoining ends are equal in thickness or do not vary more than three thirty-seconds of an inch, no special treatment is necessary if full penetration and bond are accomplished in welding.
    - (b) Where the nominal internal or external offset does not exceed one-half the thinner wall section, the transition may be made by welding or taper if full penetration and bond are accomplished and the basic precepts are adhered to.
    - (c) Where the nominal wall section of valves and fittings is greater than required for the design strength of the joint, such additional metal may be tapered to the accepted re-entrant angle as illustrated.
    - (d) For piping to operate at hoop stress of less than 20 percent of the specified minimum yield strength, where the nominal wall thickness does not vary more than one-eighth of an inch no special treatment is necessary if adequate penetration and bond are accomplished in welding.
- (3) The ends to be joined shall be aligned as accurately as practicable and the alignment shall be preserved during welding of the root bead.
21. Minimum dimensions for welds used in the attachment of slip-on flanges for socket welded joints shall be as shown in Figure 1 and the minimum dimensions for welds used in branch connections shall be as shown in Figures 2 and 3 as follows:

RECOMMENDED ATTACHMENT DETAILS OF FLANGES

22. Welding shall not be done when the quality of the completed weld would be likely to be impaired by the prevailing weather conditions, and wind shields may be used when practicable.

23. Where welds are made on piping systems intended to operate at less than 20 per cent of the specified minimum yield strength, the quality of welding shall be checked visually on a sampling basis, and, if there is any reason to believe that the weld is defective, it shall be removed from the line and tested or shall be given a non-destructive test as set out in regulation 24.

24.—(1) Where welds are made on piping systems intended to operate at 20 per cent or more of the specified minimum yield strength, the quality of the welding shall be checked,

(a) by removing completed welds; or

(b) by non-destructive testing which may consist of radiographic examination, magnetic particle testing, or other acceptable methods, but the trepanning method of non-destructive testing shall not be used.

(2) Where radiographic examination is employed, the weld shall comply with the requirements of acceptability set out in Appendix A and the number and location of welds examined shall be sufficient to reasonably ensure that sound welds are obtained.

25. No weld shall be made if it overlaps another weld.

PART IV

PIPING SYSTEM COMPONENTS AND FABRICATION DETAILS

26. All components of piping systems shall be designed and used in accordance with good engineering practice to withstand operating conditions, and with good standards of safety. Unit stresses shall not exceed those permitted by these regulations for comparable material in pipe in the same location and type of service. Components shall be designed to withstand the field test pressure to which they will be subjected without failure or leakage and without impairment of their serviceability.

27.—(1) Threaded taps in cast iron pipe shall not be used without reinforcement where the tap size is larger than 25 per cent of the nominal diameter of the pipe, except that one and one-quarter inch taps are permitted in four-inch pipe. Larger taps shall be covered by a reinforcing sleeve.

(2) Mechanical fittings may be used for making hot taps on pipe lines if they are designed for the operating pressure of the pipe line and are suitable for the purpose.

(3) Orange-peel bull plugs, orange-peel swages, and fish tails shall not be used. Flat closures shall be designed in accordance with the A.S.M.E. Boiler Code for Unfired Pressure Vessels, 1959 edition.

(4) Every prefabricated unit shall successfully withstand a pressure test without failure, leakage, distress or distortion other than elastic distortion, at a pressure equal to the test pressure of the system in which it is installed, either before installation or during the system test. Where such units are to be installed in existing systems, they shall be pressure tested before installation, if feasible; otherwise, they shall withstand a leak test at the maximum actual operating pressure of the line.

(5) Flexible couplings with rubber type gaskets, used on piping inside buildings, shall be suitably restrained.

28.—(1) This regulation applies to welded branch connections.

(2) When branch connections are made to pipe in the form of a single connection or in a header or manifold as a series of connections, the design shall be adequate to control the stress levels in the pipe within safe limits. The construction shall allow for the stresses in the remaining pipe wall due to the opening in the pipe or header, the shear stresses produced by the pressure acting on the area of the branch opening and any external loadings due to thermal movement, weight, vibration or other cause.

(3) The following design rules apply in respect of loads other than excessive external loads:

1. The reinforcement required in the crotch section of a welded branch connection shall be determined by the rule that the metal area available for reinforcement shall be equal to or greater than the required reinforcement area as defined in paragraph 2.

2. The required reinforcement area  $A_R$  is the product of  $d$  times  $t$ : where,

(a)  $d$  equals the length of the finished opening in the header wall measured parallel to the axis of the run; and

(b)  $t$  equals the nominal header wall thickness as determined under regulation 49.

Where the pipe wall thickness includes an allowance for corrosion or erosion all dimensions used shall be those that will result after the anticipated corrosion or erosion has taken place.

3. The area available for reinforcement shall be the sum of,

a. the cross-sectional area resulting from any excess thickness available in the header thickness over the minimum required for the header under paragraph 2 and that lies within the reinforcement area as defined in paragraph 4;

b. the cross-sectional area resulting from any excess thickness available in the branch wall thickness over the minimum thickness required for the branch and that lies within the reinforcement area as defined in paragraph 4; and

c. the cross-sectional area of all added reinforcing metal including weld metal, that is welded to the header wall and lies within the reinforcement area as defined in paragraph 4.

4. The area of reinforcement shown in the Figure to paragraph 5 is a rectangle of which the length extends a distance " $d$ " on each side of the transverse centreline of the finished opening and the width extends a distance of two and one-half times the header wall thickness on each side of the surface of the header wall, except that in no case shall it extend more than two and one-half times the thickness of the branch wall from the outside surface of the header or of the reinforcement, if any.

5. Paragraphs 1 to 4 are illustrated by the following Figure:

"Area of Reinforcement" Enclosed by ———— Lines.
 Reinforcement Area Required  $A_R = (d)(t)$

Area Available for Reinforcement  $= A_1 + A_2 + A_3$

$$A_1 = (H-t)(d)$$

$$A_2 = 2(B-t_b)L$$

$A_3$  = Summation of Area of All Added Reinforcement, Including Weld Areas which Lie within the "Area of Reinforcement"

$A_1 + A_2 + A_3$  must be equal to or greater than  $A_R$

Where:

$H$  = Actual Wall Thickness of Header

$B$  = Actual Wall Thickness of Branch

$t_b$  = Nominal Wall Thickness of the Branch

$t$  = Nominal Wall Thickness of the Header

$d$  = The Length of the Finished Opening in the Header Wall
 (Measured parallel to the Axis of the Header)

$M$  = Actual Thickness of Added Reinforcement

6. The material of any added reinforcement shall have an allowable working stress at least equal to that of the header wall, except that material of lower allowable stress may be used if the area is increased in direct ratio of the allowable stresses for header material to the reinforcement material.
7. The material used for ring or saddle reinforcement may be of specifications differing from those of the pipe, if the reinforcement area is made in correct proportion to the relative strength of the pipe and reinforcement materials at the operating temperatures and if it has welding qualities comparable to those of the pipe. No credit shall be allowed for the additional strength of material having a higher strength than that of the part to be reinforced.
8. When rings or saddles are used that cover the weld between branch and header, a vent hole shall be provided in the ring or saddle to reveal leakage in the weld between branch and header and to provide venting during welding and heat treatment. Vent holes shall be plugged during service with a plugging material that is not capable of sustaining pressure within the crevice.
9. The use of ribs or gussets shall not be considered as contributing to reinforcement of the branch connection.
10. The branch shall be attached by a weld for the full thickness of the branch or header wall plus a fillet weld  $W_1$ , as shown in Figures 1 and 2 to regulation 21. Concave fillet welds shall be used to minimize corner stress concentration. Ring or saddle reinforcement shall be attached as shown in Figure 2 to regulation 21.
11. Reinforcement rings and saddles shall be accurately fitted to the parts to which they are attached. Figures 1 and 2 to regulation 21 illustrate permissible forms of reinforcement.
12. Branch connections attached at an angle less than  $85^\circ$  to the run shall be given sufficient reinforcement to compensate for the weakness of the construction. Encircling ribs may be used to support the flat or re-entering surfaces, and may be included in the strength calculations.
13. Complete encirclement type reinforcement for openings shall be welded in accordance with the following Figure:

WELDING DETAILS FOR OPENINGS WITH COMPLETE ENCIRCLEMENT TYPES OF REINFORCEMENT

29. Branch connections qualifying in one of the items in Column 1 and under one of the headings in Columns 2, 3 or 4 of the following Table shall meet the requirements in the paragraphs set opposite thereto:

COLUMN 1	COLUMN 2	COLUMN 3	COLUMN 4

2. 20 to 50 per cent.....	I D	I	I H
3. 50 per cent and more.....	C D E	B E	A E F

- A. Where contoured wrought steel tees of proven design cannot be used, the reinforcing member shall extend around the circumference of the header. Pads, partial saddles, or other types of localized reinforcement shall not be used.
  - B. Where smoothly contoured tees of proven design are not used, the reinforcing member shall be of the complete encirclement type, pad type, saddle type, or a welding outlet fitting.
  - C. The reinforcement member may be of the complete encirclement type, pad type, saddle type, or welding outlet fitting type.
  - D. Reinforcement calculations are not required for openings of two inches or smaller in diameter, but care shall be taken to provide suitable protection against vibrations and other external forces to which these openings may be subjected.
  - E. All welds joining the header, branch and reinforcing member shall be equivalent to those shown in Figures 1 and 2 to regulation 21.
  - F. The inside edges of the finished opening shall, whenever possible, be rounded to a one-eighth of an inch radius. If the encircling member is thicker than the header and is welded to the header, the ends shall be tapered down to the header thickness and continuous fillet welds shall be made.
  - G. Consideration shall be given to reinforcement where it may be required for special cases involving pressures over 100 psig., thin wall pipe or severe external loads.
  - H. If a reinforcement member is required, and the branch diameter is such that a localized type of reinforcement member would extend around more than half the circumference of the header, a complete encirclement type of reinforcement member or a smoothly contoured wrought steel tee of proven design shall be used, regardless of the design hoop stress.
  - I. The reinforcement may be of any type that meets the requirements of regulation 28.
- 30.—(1) Subject to subregulation 2, unless forged fittings are used, multiple openings shall not be used where they are spaced at less than two times their average diameter or so that their effective areas of reinforcement overlap.
- (2) Where the spacing of two or more adjacent branches at less than two times their average diameter or so that their effective areas of reinforcement overlap is unavoidable,
- (a) the group of openings shall be reinforced in accordance with regulations 28 and 29;
  - (b) the reinforcing metal shall be added as a combined reinforcement, the strength of which shall equal the combined strengths of the reinforcements that would be required for the separate openings; and
  - (c) in no case shall any portion of a cross-section be considered to apply to more than one opening or be evaluated more than once in a combined area.
- (3) Where more than two adjacent openings are provided with a combined reinforcement, the minimum distance between centres of any two openings shall be at least  $1\frac{1}{2}$  times their average diameter, and the area of reinforcement between them shall be at least equal to 50 percent of the total required for the two openings on the cross-section being considered.
- (4) Where the distance between centres of two adjacent openings is less than one and one-third times their average diameter, no credit for reinforcement shall be given for any of the metal between the two openings.
- (5) Any number of closely spaced adjacent openings, in any arrangement, may be reinforced as if the group were treated as one opening of a diameter enclosing all the openings.
- 31. Regulations 32 to 40 apply to above-ground piping only.
- 32.—(1) Pipe lines shall be designed to have sufficient flexibility to prevent thermal expansion or contraction from causing excessive stresses in the piping material, excessive bending or unusual loads at joints, or undesirable forces or moments at points of connection to equipment or at anchorage or guide points.
- (2) Flexibility shall be provided by the use of bends, loops or offsets; or provision shall be made to absorb thermal changes by the use of expansion joints or couplings of the slip joint type or expansion joints of the bellows type. If expansion joints are used, anchors or ties of sufficient strength and rigidity shall be installed to provide for end forces due to fluid pressure and other causes.
- 33.—(1) Where any reasonable doubt exists as to the adequate flexibility of a piping system, calculations shall be made.
- (2) In calculating the flexibility of a piping system the system shall be treated as a whole. The significance of all parts of the line and all restraints, such as solid supports or guides, shall be considered.
- (3) Calculations shall take into account stress intensification factors found to exist in components other than plain straight pipe. Credit may be taken for the extra flexibility of such components. In the absence of more directly applicable data, the flexibility factors and stress intensification factors shown in the following Table may be used:

†Where flanges are attached to one or both ends, the values of k and i in the Table shall be multiplied by the following factors:

One end flanged:  $h^{1/6}$  Both ends flanged:  $h^{1/3}$

(4) For the purpose of the calculations, properties of pipe and fittings shall be based on nominal dimensions, and the joint factor E in the Table to subregulation 3 of regulation 50 shall be taken as 1.00.

(5) The total range in temperature shall be used in expansion calculations, whether piping is cold-sprung or not. In addition to the expansion of the line itself, the linear and angular movements of the equipment to which it is attached shall be considered.

34. In order to modify the effect of expansion and contraction, runs of pipe may be cold-sprung. Cold-springing may be taken into account in the calculations of the reactions as shown in regulation 36, if an effective method is used of obtaining the amount of cold-springing.

35.—(1) Pipe lines shall be designed to have a computed stress range of not more than 0.72 times the specified minimum yield strength, and to have a specified minimum yield strength of not more than the total of,

(a) the combined expansion stresses being S<sub>E</sub> as determined by the formula in subregulation 2;

(b) the longitudinal pressure stress; and
(c) the longitudinal bending stress due to weight of pipe and contents and external loads, and the sum of clauses b and c shall not exceed 75 per cent of the allowable stress being S x F x E x T as determined under regulation 49.

(2) Expansion stresses shall be combined in accordance with the following formula:

Where S<sub>b</sub> = i M<sub>b</sub>/Z = Resultant bending stress, psi.

S<sub>t</sub> = M<sub>t</sub>/2Z = Torsional stress; psi.

M<sub>b</sub> = Resultant bending moment; in inch pounds.

M<sub>t</sub> = Torsional moment; in inch pounds.

i = Stress intensification factor.

Z = Section modulus of pipe, in inches cubed.

36. Attached equipment or anchorage shall be installed to sustain the reaction  $R^1$  which shall be computed as follows:

$$R^1 = 1 - 2/3 C_s R, \text{ when } C_s \text{ is less than } 0.6$$

$$R^1 = C_s R, \text{ when } C_s \text{ is between } 0.6 \text{ and } 1.0$$

Where

$R^1$  = The maximum reaction for the line after cold springing.

$C_s$  = The cold spring factor.

$R$  = Range of reactions corresponding to the full expansion range based on  $E_c$ .

$E_c$  = The modulus of elasticity.

SUPPORTS AND ANCHORAGE FOR EXPOSED PIPING

37.—(1) Piping and equipment shall be supported in a substantial and workmanlike manner, so as to prevent or damp out excessive vibration, and shall be anchored sufficiently to prevent undue strains on connected equipment.

(2) Suitable spring hangers, sway bracing or other provisions for expansion shall be provided where necessary.

38. All permanent hangers, supports and anchors shall be fabricated from durable non-combustible materials, and designed and installed in accordance with good engineering practice for the service conditions involved. All parts of the supporting equipment shall be designed and installed so that they will not be disengaged by movement of the supported piping.

39.—(1) All exposed pipe joints shall be able to sustain the maximum end force due to the internal pressure, computed as the design pressure times the internal area of the pipe, as well as any additional forces due to temperature expansion or contraction or to the weight of the pipe and contents.

(2) If compression or sleeve-type couplings are used in exposed piping, provision shall be made to sustain the end force referred to in subregulation 1. If such provision is not made in the manufacture of the coupling, suitable bracing or strapping shall be provided, but the design shall not interfere with the normal performance of the coupling nor with its proper maintenance. Attachments shall meet the requirements of regulation 40.

40.—(1) Where pipe is designed to operate at a hoop stress of less than 50 per cent of the specified minimum yield strength, structural supports or anchors may be welded directly to the pipe. Proportioning and welding strength requirements of such attachments shall conform to standard structural practice.

(2) Where pipe is designed to operate at a hoop stress of 50 per cent or more of the specified minimum yield strength, support of the pipe shall be furnished by a member that completely encircles it. Where it is necessary to provide positive attachment, as at an anchor, the pipe shall be welded to the encircling member only and the support shall be attached to the encircling member, and not to the pipe. The connection of the pipe to the encircling member shall be by continuous welds.

SUPPORTS AND ANCHORAGE FOR BURIED PIPING

41. Forces in bends or offsets in buried pipe shall be resisted by anchorage at the bend, by restraint due to friction of the soil, or by longitudinal stresses in the pipe.

42.—(1) Where pipe is anchored by bearing at the bend, the load shall be distributed on the soil so that the bearing pressure is within safe limits for the type of soil involved.

(2) If anchorage is not provided at the bend, pipe joints that are close to the points of origin of thrust shall be designed to sustain the longitudinal pullout force. If compensation for the longitudinal pullout force is not made in the manufacture of the joint, suitable bracing or strapping shall be provided, unless calculations show the joint to be safe.

43. Where there is doubt as to the adequacy of anchorage by soil friction, calculations shall be made.

44. The pipe shall be uniformly and adequately supported in the trench.

45. Where openings are made in a consolidated backfill to connect new branches to an existing line, firm foundation shall be provided for both the header and the branch to prevent both vertical and lateral movements. If connections are made at such a location to a relatively unyielding line, or other fixed object, the interconnection shall have ample flexibility to care for possible movement, or the line shall be provided with an anchor sufficient to develop the forces necessary to limit the movement.

46.—(1) All components of the piping system shall be suitably and adequately supported.

(2) Boxes installed for access to any components such as valves shall be so installed that external loads are not transmitted to the component. Valves with integral stem extensions may be used if the stem extension is adequately protected from damage.

PART V

DESIGN, INSTALLATION AND TESTING

47.—(1) For the purposes of these regulations,

- (a) a one-mile density index for a proposed pipe line is determined by laying out a zone one-half mile wide and one mile long along the route of the pipe line with the pipe line on the centre line of the zone, and counting the number of buildings intended for human occupancy in the zone; and

- (c) Class 1 locations are waste lands, deserts, rugged mountains, grazing land, or farm land, in which,
  - (i) the ten-mile density index for any section of the line is twelve or less, and

(2) Notwithstanding regulation 49, the design pressure for all pipe other than butt-welded pipe shall not exceed 85 per cent of the mill test pressure but if the pipe is mill tested to a pressure less than 85 per cent of the pressure required to produce a stress equal to the specified minimum yield strength and is retested with a mill type hydrostatic test or tested in place after installation by the use of liquid, to a pressure in excess of the mill test pressure, then the design pressure shall not exceed 85 per cent of the retest pressure rather than the initial mill test pressure.

52.—(1) Transportation, installation or repair of pipe shall not reduce the wall thickness at any point to a thickness less than 90 per cent of the nominal wall thickness as determined under regulation 49 for the design pressure to which the pipe is to be subjected.

(2) The nominal wall thickness shall not be less than that shown in the following Table:

NOTE : If threaded pipe is to be used in those sizes for which least nominal wall thicknesses are given for "Plain End Only", those thicknesses marked by * shall be increased as follows:

for  $2\frac{1}{2}$  inch diameter to 0.203;
for 3 inch diameter to 0.216;
for  $3\frac{1}{2}$  inch diameter to 0.226;

for 4 inch diameter to 0.237;
and for 5 inch diameter to 0.258;

and 0.100 inch shall be added to all other wall thicknesses.

(3) Where pipe that has been cold worked for the purpose of meeting the specified minimum yield strength has been heated other than in the course of welding to 600° Fahrenheit or higher, the maximum allowable operating pressure shall not exceed 75 per cent of the design pressure as determined under regulation 49.

(4) The value of a physical property as determined under these regulations shall be used for the purpose of these regulations except that where the actual value is determined to be less, the actual value shall be used.

53.—(1) Where a fabricated assembly is installed in a Class 1 location, Type B construction shall be used throughout the assembly, and for a distance of five pipe diameters in each direction beyond the last fittings other than transition pieces at the end of an assembly and elbows used in place of pipe bends.

(2) Pipe lines supported by railroad, vehicular, pedestrian, or pipe line bridges shall be constructed in accordance with the construction type prescribed for the area in which the bridge is located, except that in Class 1 locations Type B construction shall be used.

54.—(1) When pipe lines are installed where they will be subjected to natural hazards, such as washouts, floods, unstable soil, land slides, or other conditions which may cause serious movement of, or abnormal loads on the pipe line, reasonable precautions shall be taken to protect the pipe line.

(2) Where pipe lines are exposed, such as at spans, trestles and bridge crossings, the pipe lines shall be reasonably protected by distance or barricades from accidental damage by vehicular traffic or other cause.

55. The company shall,

- employ blow-down connections on pipe lines that will direct the gas away from electric conductors; and
- install a bonding conductor across points where a pipe line is separated and maintain this connection while the pipe line is separated.

56.—(1) Pipe lines, other than cast iron pipe lines and casings, shall be buried with a minimum cover of twenty-four inches, unless otherwise provided herein or by order of the Board. In the construction of pipe lines in lake beds, stream beds and swampy ground, sufficient burial depth and anchorage shall be provided to ensure reasonable protection of the pipe lines.

(2) Buried pipe lines, other than cast iron pipe lines, operating at hoop stresses of less than 20 per cent of the specified minimum yield strength and located within private rights-of-way, private thoroughfares, sidewalks or parkways, may be installed with less than the minimum cover of twenty-four inches if it appears that external damage to the pipe will not be likely to result.

(3) Abandoned pipe having a cover less than twenty-four inches may be used as a casing or conduit for pipe lines operating at hoop stresses less than 20 per cent of the specified minimum yield strength.

(4) Buried pipe lines, installed in areas where farming or other operations might result in deep plowing, or in thoroughfares or other locations where grading is done, or where the area is subject to erosion, shall be buried to sufficient depth to adequately protect the pipe line.

(5) Where it is not practicable to comply with subregulation 1, and it is necessary to prevent damage from external forces, the pipe shall be cased or bridged.

(6) Casings shall be designed to withstand super-imposed loads and the ends of the casing shall be sealed. If the end sealing is of a type that will retain the full pressure in the pipe, the casing shall be designed for the same pressure as the pipe, but according to Type A construction requirements. If vents are installed they shall be constructed to prevent water from entering the casing.

57. There shall be at least two inches clearance wherever possible between any pipe line and any other underground structure not used in conjunction with the pipe line. Where this clearance cannot be attained, other suitable precautions to protect the pipe shall be taken.

58. If corrosion may occur to the extent that public safety is in danger and cathodic protection is not provided and if the maximum hoop stress due to gas pressure is more than 20 per cent of the specified minimum yield strength, the nominal wall thickness of the pipe shall be increased by not less than .05 inches for external corrosion and .075 inches for internal corrosion.

59. A steel pipe line shall be investigated for its resistance to external corrosion and if the investigation indicates that protection from external corrosion is needed for public safety, the pipe line shall be protected by any recognized method or combination of methods including coating with protective material, application of cathodic protection or electrical bonding or isolation of sections.

60. The company shall make provision for suitable inspection during construction by persons who are qualified by experience or training.

61. During the installation of pipe lines and other facilities to operate at hoop stresses of 20 per cent or more of the specified minimum yield strength the provision for inspection shall include,

- (a) inspection of the surface of the pipe for serious surface defects just prior to the coating operation;
- (b) inspection of the surface of the coated pipe as it is lowered into the ditch to find coating lacerations that indicate the pipe might have been damaged after being coated;
- (c) inspection of the fit-up of the joints before the weld is made;
- (d) visual inspection of the stringer beads before subsequent beads are applied;
- (e) inspection of completed welds before they are covered with coating;
- (f) inspection of the condition of the ditch bottom just before the pipe is lowered in;
- (g) inspection of the fit of the pipe to the ditch before backfilling;
- (h) inspection of all repairs, replacements or changes ordered before they are covered up; and
- (i) such special tests and inspections as are required by the specifications.

62.—(1) Changes in direction of steel pipe lines shall be made by the use of bends or fittings.

(2) Mitre bends and wrinkle bends shall not be used.

(3) The bends shall be free from buckling, cracks or other evidence of mechanical damage. For cold field bends on sizes twelve inches and larger, the longitudinal axis of the pipe shall not be deflected more than one and one-half degrees in any length equal to the diameter of the pipe measured along the pipe axis. Bends shall not have a difference between the maximum and minimum diameters in excess of 2.5 per cent of the nominal diameter.

(4) Where a circumferential weld occurs in a bend section where the hoop stress is in excess of 20 per cent of the specified minimum yield strength, it shall be given a radiographic examination after bending.

(5) Hot bends made on cold worked or heat treated pipe shall be designed for lower stress levels in accordance with subregulation 3 of regulation 51.

(6) Factory-made wrought steel welding elbows or transverse segments cut therefrom may be used for changes in direction if the arc length measured along the crotch is at least one inch on pipe sizes of two inches and larger.

63.—(1) No person shall use pipe that is gouged, grooved or dented for pressures that produce a hoop stress in excess of 20 per cent of the specified minimum yield strength.

(2) During installation of a pipe line, the company shall provide adequate inspection to minimize the possibility that gouged, grooved, or dented pipe is installed.

64.—(1) Injurious gouges or grooves shall be removed.

(2) Gouges or grooves may be removed by grinding if the resulting wall thickness is not less than the minimum prescribed by these regulations for the conditions of use.

(3) Where gouges or grooves cannot be removed by grinding, the damaged portion of pipe shall be cut out as a cylinder and replaced with a sound piece.

65. Dents that are more than one-quarter inch deep, measured as the gap between the lowest point of the dent and a prolongation of the original contour of the pipe, shall be removed from pipe lines intended to operate at 50 per cent or more of the specified minimum yield strength. Removal of dents in the field shall be done by cutting out a cylindrical section of pipe and not by insert-patching or pounding out the dent.

66.—(1) Arc burns in API 5LX pipe or pipe of equal specified minimum yield strength intended for use at 50 per cent or more of its specified minimum yield strength shall be eliminated.

(2) The metallurgical notch caused by arc burns shall be eliminated by grinding if the grinding does not reduce the remaining wall thickness to less than the minimum prescribed by these regulations for the conditions of use. In all other cases the portion of pipe containing the arc burn shall be cut out as a cylinder and replaced with a sound piece.

(3) An arc burn shall not be deemed to be eliminated unless, after grinding, the ground area is swabbed with a 20 per cent solution of ammonium persulfate and no blackened spot indicates the metallurgical notch.

67.—(1) Protective coatings for underground piping shall be applied in accordance with the company's coating specifications included in the specifications filed with the Board under regulation 11. These specifications shall also cover the patching of damaged spots, the coating of joints and the coating of short lengths of pipe and fittings in the field.

(2) Crews that apply protective coatings shall be suitably instructed and provided with all of the equipment necessary to accomplish their work in a satisfactory manner.

(3) The protective coating shall be inspected and tested either completely or on a sampling basis using a recognized flaw detector before or after backfilling.

68.—(1) Where electrical test leads for corrosion control testing or electrolysis testing are installed on pipe lines to operate at 20 per cent or more of the specified minimum yield strength, they shall be installed to avoid undue stress.

(2) Electrical test leads shall be attached directly on to the pipe by the thermit welding process using aluminum powder and copper oxide, and the charge shall not be greater than fifteen gram cartridges, and the size of electrical conductor shall not be greater than No. 6 American Wire Gauge unless the conductor is a multi-strand conductor and the strands are rearranged into groups no larger than No. 6 American Wire Gauge and each group is attached to the pipe separately.

(3) All test lead connections and all bare leads shall be protected by coating or wrapping.

69. Care shall be taken not to damage the pipe in handling, hauling, unloading and placing.

70. On pipe lines operating at stresses of 20 per cent or more of the specified minimum yield strength, stresses induced into the pipe line by construction shall be minimized by,

- (a) grading the trench so that the pipe has a firm substantially continuous bearing on the bottom of the trench and the pipe fits the trench without the use of external force to hold it in place until the backfill is completed; and
- (b) when long sections of pipe that have been welded alongside the trench are lowered in, by not jerking the pipe or imposing any strains that may kink or put a permanent bend in the pipe.

71.—(1) Backfilling shall be performed in a manner to provide firm support under the pipe.

(2) If there are large rocks in the material to be used for backfill, damage to the coating shall be prevented.

(3) Where the trench is flooded to consolidate the backfill, steps shall be taken to ensure that the pipe is not floated from its bearing on the trench bottom.

(4) When the ground is frozen, the pipe line shall bear evenly on the trench bottom. Suitable loose fill material shall be provided in the trench to achieve uniform and adequate support throughout the pipe line. Provision shall also be made to protect the pipe line against damage from frozen backfill.

72. All hot taps shall be installed by trained and experienced crews.

73. Welding or cutting with cutting torches shall not be performed on pipe lines or auxiliary equipment where the pipe line or auxiliary equipment contains a mixture of gas and air.

74. No welding or acetylene cutting shall be done on a pipe line or auxiliary equipment that contains air if it is connected to a source of gas, unless a suitable means has been provided to prevent the leakage of gas into the pipe line.

75.—(1) Where a pipe line full of air is placed in service, the air in it shall be displaced with gas by introducing a moderately rapid and continuous flow of gas at one end of the line and venting the air out the other end. The gas flow shall be continued without interruption until the vented gas is free from air.

(2) Gas in a pipe line may be displaced with air by a procedure in reverse to that set out in subregulation 1 but where the rate at which air can be supplied to the line is too small to make the procedure feasible, a slug of inert gas shall be introduced to prevent the formation of an explosive mixture at the interface between gas and air.

(3) When a pipe line containing gas is being removed,

- (a) a slight flow of gas shall be kept moving toward the point where cutting or welding is being done;
- (b) the gas pressure at the site of work shall be controlled;
- (c) all slots or open ends shall be closed immediately after they are cut with tape, tightly fitting canvas or other suitable material; and
- (d) no two openings shall be open at the same time, or alternately, the line shall be first disconnected from all sources of gas and then thoroughly purged with air, water or with inert gas before any further cutting or welding is done.

(4) If a pipe line or auxiliary equipment is to be filled with air after having been in service and there is a reasonable possibility that the inside surfaces of the facility are wetted with a volatile inflammable liquid, or if such liquids might have accumulated in low places, the pipe line shall be purged in a manner that removes the liquid.

76. Whenever the accidental ignition in the open air of a gas-air mixture may be likely to occur, precautions shall be taken to prevent personal injury or property damage.

77.—(1) All pipe lines to be operated at a hoop stress of 30 per cent or more of the specified minimum yield strength of the pipe shall be given a field test to prove strength after construction and before being placed in operation.

(2) Pipe lines in Class 1 locations shall be tested with air, water or gas, to a pressure of 1.1 times the maximum allowable operating pressure. Gas shall not be used as a test medium in any location where a forest fire or bush fire might occur if the gas became ignited, or the safety of the public on a highway is involved.

(3) Pipe lines in Class 2 locations shall be tested with water or air to a pressure of 1.25 times the maximum allowable operating pressure.

(4) Subject to subregulations 5 and 6, pipe lines in Class 3 or 4 locations shall be tested hydrostatically to a pressure not less than 1.5 times the maximum allowable operating pressure.

(5) If, at the time the pipe line referred to in subregulation 4 is first ready for test,

- (a) ground temperature at pipe depth is 32° F. or less, or might fall to that temperature before the hydrostatic test is completed; or
- (b) water of satisfactory quality is not available in sufficient quantity, an air test to 1.1 times the maximum allowable pressure shall be made.

- if,
- (6) Air testing may be used in Class 3 or 4 locations if,
    - (a) the maximum hoop stress during test is less than 50 per cent of the specified minimum yield strength in Class 3 locations, and less than 40 per cent of the specified minimum yield strength in Class 4 locations;
    - (b) the maximum pressure at which the pipe line is to be operated does not exceed 80 per cent of the maximum field test pressure used; and
    - (c) the pipe involved is new pipe having a longitudinal joint factor E of 1.00.

78. Every company shall maintain for the useful life of each pipe line records showing the type of fluid used for the test, test pressure and the duration of the test.

79. Steel piping that is to operate in a Class 2, 3 or 4 location at hoop stresses of less than 30 per cent of the specified minimum yield strength but in excess of 100 psig shall be tested to at least 1.5 times the maximum actual operating pressure. The test medium used may be water, air or gas, but air or gas shall not be used to a higher hoop stress during the test than the percentage of the specified minimum yield strength set out in Column 2, 3, 4 or 5 for the class of location in the heading thereof, of the following Table:

COLUMN 1	COLUMN 2	COLUMN 3	COLUMN 4	COLUMN 5
	Class 1	Class 2	Class 3	Class 4
Air.....	79.2%	75%	50%	40%
Gas.....	79.2%	30%	30%	30%

- 80.—(1) Each pipe line except tie-ins shall be tested, after construction and before being placed in operation, to ensure that it does not leak. If the test indicates a leak exists, the leak shall be eliminated. The test shall be conducted with instruments that are in good repair and of sufficient sensitivity and capacity to detect leakage after taking into consideration the duration of the test and the physical and climatic conditions.
- (2) Where a pipe line is to be stressed in a strength-proof test to 20 per cent or more of the specified minimum yield strength of the pipe, and gas or air is the test medium, a leak test shall be made at a pressure in the range from 100 psig to that required to produce a hoop stress of 20 per cent of the specified minimum yield strength, or the line shall be walked while the hoop stress is held at approximately 20 per cent of the specified minimum yield strength.
- 81.—(1) Before pipe lines and related equipment are placed in operation to operate at less than 100 psig, they shall be tested to ensure that they are gas-tight.
- (2) Gas may be used as the test medium at the maximum pressure available in the piping system at the time of the test. In this case the soap bubble test may be used to locate leaks if all joints are accessible during the test.

- (3) A leak test pressure of 100 psig shall be used on coated pipe lines, other than service lines, where the protected coating may seal a split pipe seam.
82. All testing of pipe lines after construction shall be done with due regard for the safety of employees and the public during the test. When air or gas is used, suitable steps shall be taken to keep persons not working on the testing operations out of the testing area during the period in which the hoop stress is first raised from 50 per cent of the specified minimum yield strength to the maximum test stress, and until the pressure is reduced to the maximum actual operating pressure.
- 83.—(1) Cast iron pipe installed under a condition set out in the heading for Column 3, 4 or 5 and to have a maximum allowable operating pressure set out in Column 2 referable to its size in Column 1 shall have a wall thickness not less than that shown opposite thereto,
- (a) for pit cast pipe, in Table 1; and
  - (b) for pipe centrifugally cast in metal molds or sand lined molds, in Table 2,
- as follows:

121.—(1) Every pressure relief device or pressure limiting device shall,

- (a) be constructed of such materials that the operation of the device is not impaired by corrosion;

- (b) have valves and valve seats that are designed not to stick in a position that will make the device inoperative; and
- (c) be designed and installed so that it can be readily operated to determine if the valve is free, can be tested to determine the pressure at which it will operate, and can be tested for leakage when in the closed position.

(2) The discharge stacks, vents or outlet ports of all pressure relief devices shall be located where gas can be discharged into the atmosphere without hazard. Where required to protect devices, the discharge stacks, or vents shall be protected with rain caps to prevent the entry of water.

(3) The vent line and the openings in pipe and fittings located between the system to be protected and the pressure relief device, shall be of adequate size to prevent hammering of the valve and to prevent impairment of relieving capacity.

122.—(1) Precautions shall be taken to prevent any valve from being operated without the authority of the Company, to make a pressure relief valve inoperative, except a valve the operation of which isolates the system under protection from its source of pressure.

(2) The precautions may consist of,

- (a) a lock installed to lock the stop valve in the open position and the instruction of personnel in the importance of not inadvertently leaving the stop valve closed and of being present during the entire period that the stop valve is closed so that they can lock it in the open position before they leave the location; or
- (b) duplicate relief valves, each having adequate capacity by itself to protect the system, so that mechanically it is possible to render only one relief device inoperative at a time.

123.—(1) Where a monitoring regulator, series regulator, system relief or system shut-off is installed to protect a piping system from overpressuring, the installation shall be designed and installed to prevent any accidental damage from affecting the operation of both the overpressure protective device and the regulator.

(2) All control lines shall be protected from foreseeable causes of damage and shall be designed and installed to prevent damage to any one control line from making both the regulator and the overpressure protective device inoperative.

124. Each pressure relief station or pressure limiting station or group of such stations installed to protect a piping system shall have sufficient capacity and shall be set to operate to prevent the pressure,

- (a) in the case of a higher-pressure piping system, from exceeding the maximum allowable operating pressure by more than 10 per cent or the pressure that produces a hoop stress of 75 per cent of the specified minimum yield strength, whichever is the lower; or
- (b) in the case of a low-pressure piping system, from exceeding a pressure that would cause the unsafe operation of any connected and properly adjusted gas-burning equipment.

125. Where more than one pressure regulating station or compressor station feeds into a local piping system and pressure relief devices are installed at such stations, the relieving capacity at the other stations may be taken into account in sizing the relief devices at each station, but the relieving capacity referable to the other stations shall be limited to the capacity of the piping system to transmit gas to the location of the other stations or to the capacity of the relief device at the other stations, whichever is the lesser.

126.—(1) All piping systems shall be equipped with a sufficient number of telemetering or recording pressure gauges to indicate the gas pressure therein.

(2) Where abnormal high or low pressure is indicated, the regulator and the auxiliary equipment shall be inspected to ascertain the cause, and corrective measures shall be taken.

127.—(1) Where a pressure limiting device or pressure relief device consists of an additional regulator that is associated with or functions in combination with one or more regulators in a series to control or limit the pressure in a piping system, inspections shall be made to determine that the equipment operates in a satisfactory manner to prevent any pressure in excess of the maximum allowable operating pressure of the system if any one of the associated regulators does not function properly.

(2) The company shall make inspections periodically to ensure that the combined capacity of the relief devices on a piping system or facility is adequate to limit at all times the gas pressure under operating conditions that create the greatest probable requirement for relief capacity to the limits prescribed by these regulations.

132.—(1) Where the nature of the utilization equipment is such that it may induce a vacuum at the meter, a back-pressure regulator shall be installed downstream from the meter.

(2) A check valve or its equivalent shall be installed if,

- (a) the utilization equipment might induce a back-pressure;

133. All service regulator vents and relief vents shall terminate in the outside air in rain resistant and insect resistant fittings. The open end of the vent shall be located where, if the regulator fails and gas is released, the gas can escape freely into the atmosphere and away from any openings into buildings. At locations where service regulators might be submerged during floods, either a special anti-flood type breather vent fitting shall be installed, or the vent line shall be extended above the height of the possible flood waters.

134. Pits and vaults housing meters and regulators shall be designed to support vehicular traffic when installed in,
